Norham Castle, originally built by Ralph Flambard in 1121, was taken and partially destroyed by David, King of Scotland, in 1138, and restored by Bishop Pudsey (who built the great tower in 1154). It has been the scene of numerous struggles between the English and Scottish forces and is also notable from Sir Walter Scott's opening words of "Marmion" "Day set on Norham castell'd steep".
